Executive Director Livingston honored by ACA

In August, TDCJ Executive Director Brad Livingston was the recipient of the American Correctional Association's E.R. Cass Award.

The E.R. Cass Correctional Achievement Award was created in 1962 in honor of Edward R. Cass, who devoted more than 50 years of his life to corrections. The ACA honors corrections' most dedicated professionals with the E.R. Cass Award; recipients must have made an outstanding contribution over the course of their career to the Association and the field of professional corrections, and must also serve the community in both their correctional and non-correctional lives.

James Gondles, executive director of the American Correctional Association, commented on Livingston's career achievements, saying, "Brad Livingston's leadership with TDCJ has led to Texas becoming fully accredited. The improvements he has implemented at TDCJ have benefited the staff, the offenders and the citizens of Texas. He is a leader in American Corrections." ●
